EDITOR'S NOTE

In 2003, the Cox Center and the Journal of International Law at Case Western Reserve School of Law sponsored a symposium focusing on international arbitration of controversial medical technologies. Published in this issue are the lectures given during that symposium.

This issue is the result of the combined publishing efforts of two editorial boards – the 2003-2004 Board and the 2004-2005 Board. Special thanks is owed to James R. Lisher II, the Executive Symposium & Topic Development Editor, who helped coordinate the symposium and provided the initial edits on all of the articles. Associate Editors William H. Carmines, Amy E. Miller, and Adam Rogalski also provided a significant assistance in publishing this issue.

As always, I would like to thank Alice Simon and Nancy Pratt Kantor for their help in organizing the publishing effort. Further, I would like to thank Dean Hiram Chodosh for his guidance and vision. The Journal made great strides this year under his tutelage. Finally, I would like to thank our subscribers and contributing authors for their patience throughout the publication process.
